The Roman Empire Constantine II bronze coin, minted in Trier between AD 324 and 325. It presents a glimpse into the imagery and symbolism of the time.

The obverse side of the coin features a laureate, draped, and cuirassed bust of Constantine II facing left. The inscription "CONSTANTINVS IVN NOB C" accompanies the image, identifying Constantine II as the emperor.

On the reverse side, the coin depicts the inscription "PROVIDENTIAE CAESS," which translates to "To the Providence of the Emperors." It showcases a camp gate with two turrets, lacking doors, and a star positioned above. The exergue displays the letters "STRE," indicating the mint location as Trier.

This bronze coin serves as a testament to the political and symbolic representations of the era of Constantine II. With its fine preservation, intricate design, and historical significance, it holds value for collectors and enthusiasts of ancient numismatics, providing a tangible link to the reign of this Roman emperor.
